BURNED TO DEATH ON HORSEBACK.

A Bottle of Vitriol Spilling in a Boy's Pocket and Running Over His Limbs.

SCRANTON, Pa.—Adam Roche, a fifteen-year-old son of Frederick Roche, a blacksmith at the Continental shaft in this city, was burned to death yesterday afternoon on the road between Scranton and Taylorville. He was employed around the blacksmith shop as an assistant. Some of the live stock at the mines became sick, and young Roche was sent to Taylorville to procure some vitriol. He went on horseback. He purchased a bottle containing a pint and started back, bringing two mules along. Half way between Taylorville and the mine the cork came out of the bottle, and the jolting caused the vitriol to spatter into his coat pocket. Then it slowly worked through to his pantaloons, and went streaming along his limbs. The first touch of the vitriol caused the boy to squint with pain, and the last of the contents of the bottle was spilled in his clothing.

HIS CRIES OF AGONY.

spurred the horse into a run, and the suffering boy endeavored to throw the bottle from his pocket. This action burned his hands severely, and he clasped them to his face, which added greatly to his agony. He lost his control of the horse, and just at the foot of a steep declivity in the road he was hurled violently into a ditch, where he lay writhing in anguish. He recovered sufficiently to tie the mules to a tree. The horse went back to the mine, and the boy's father and several others set out to find the lad. When he was discovered he was dead. The oil had eaten into his limbs, and he presented a frightful spectacle. His hands were badly blistered, his cheeks were burned, and the vitriol had sunk to the bones in his legs. The boy had torn away nearly all of his clothing, except what had been saturated with the oil. A large wound on his head showed that he had been thrown head forward from the horse. He crawled to a tree on the hillside, and his appearance showed that he had suffered the greatest agony.

Frozen to Death.

A Dakota man was moving his family into a new house, and left his stove for the last trip. Within a hundred steps of the house his wife was taken ill. Leaving the two youngest children in a drygoods box on the hand sleigh, he helped her and two older children into the house, where, in order to prevent their freezing, they were all put to bed. He then returned to the two children and was frozen to death before he reached them. The wife lay in bed until the next day without fire or food. The father lay dead near the corpse of his two boys in the box, but, although the children in bed with their mother were frozen nearly to death, it is believed they will recover.

On and After Jan. 1st, 1880, Until Feb. 1st, 1880, / The firm of Hagerman & Schelling will sell any or all of their immense stock of groceries, hardware, queensware, notions, etc., at cost for cash. This is done for the purpose of closing out the business of the old concern preparatory for a change in the firm; all accounts will be closed. All having bills against said firm will please present the same for payment. All those knowing themselves indebted to the firm will please come forward and settle without further notice.

The Word "Sozodont."

Which has already become a household word, is derived from the Greek, and is composed of two words, Soze and Odontes. "Soze" translated, means to preserve, and "Odontes" the teeth—"SOZODONT" a preserver of the teeth. And it is true to its name. It beautifies and preserves the teeth, hardens and invigorates the gums, and corrects all impurities of the breath. The odor of this preparation is so delightful that it is a luxury to apply it. It is as harmless as water. Sold by druggists and perfumers.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT

The change of time in the trains causes not a little confusion in the minds of the travelling community. It is much more general than any ever made before. Nearly every train between the Great Salt Lake and the Pacific ocean is affected. The public will soon get accustomed to it, however, and it will no doubt give general satisfaction in the end, although some of the Sacramento people say the way trains run now works to the advantage of San Francisco as against their city. So it seems there is no way to satisfy everybody. "So runs the world away." Stepping out of the sleeper into a fine, light and roomy building one can hardly realize that he is in Sacramento. The old, grimy, dark, narrow depot has so identified itself with the capital city, that the change is as surprising as it is agreeable. Leaving Sacramento, the wheels bang along over the old iron laid down when the road was built until the train reaches Susan, where the new line leaves the old and strikes off to the left through the hills toward Benicia. Much of the way the water covers the ground on both sides of the road, and in several places the track has sunk considerably. Piling in of earth to make a bank has caused the black mud to rise up above the surface and has seeped it up three or four feet high in places. The scenery is far from commonplace. Green hills rise on the north side of the road, and on the other a wide expanse of brown tulle, over which speeds an occasional flight of wild ducks, stretches to the river, on which are several picturesque looking towns. The setting sun gives a variety of tints to Mt. Diablo, which is so near that the farm houses and plowed fields on the rolling hills between it and the river may be plainly seen. When the train reaches the river, it swings around and follows it to Benicia, which excites almost as much interest as the big boat that stands waiting just beyond the depot. The old brick warehouses of the California Navigation Co. are the first things seen. They stand on a point of land which hides the town from any distant view. The old state capitol is a solid looking brick building in the foreground. The Episcopal church has a seminary for girls and another one for boys here, which are well located. The train moves on to the boat, engine and all, and she crosses the stream in just eight minutes. Everything in and about her seems to be working well. The floating docks are raised and lowered by hydraulic machinery, which does its work almost in an instant. Two switch engines are stationed on each side, so that no delay need occur in case of heavy trains coming along. It is likely that two will be found sufficient to do all the work on both sides, and even one might do it, if there are not too many cars to move, as it could go over and back any time. The ends of the rails are guarded by heavy iron chains and double busters a foot square, and held in place by iron clamps, so that even if the brakes failed, a car could hardly run off into the water. Over sixty men are employed to run the ferry; for twenty of them on the boat itself. There are four engineers, sixteen firemen, eight officers, and four deckhands, besides a bartender and cooks and waiters in the restaurant.

DO-FISH-HEART

Prof. E. D. Cope, a well known naturalist, has in a recent number of the Forest and Stream, contradicted Seth Green's assertion that fish cannot hear. Prof. Cope says that at the base of every scale of a fish there is a nerve which communicates with an internal ear in the fish's head. Any vibration in the water is communicated to the scale nerves of the fish and by them passed on to the internal ear. Thus a fish with scales can hear. But how if it has no scales? Prof. Cope does not say in what way the scaleless fish hear. Perhaps the scaleless fish are deaf.

It is interesting, however, to know that at least some fish have an internal ear. But even should that be established, it would be somewhat difficult to refer in ordinary phraseology to a fish that was using its ear. One could hardly speak of a fish as being in a listening attitude or say that it "inclined its ear," "pricked up its ear," or "turned a deaf ear." Still less would it do to say that a fish "got up on its ear," "marched up on its ear," or "stood on its ear."

A listening fish may hereafter be described somewhat after this fashion: "Dash blink the trout," said the Impatient angler, as he cast for the hundredth time his artful flies over a pool where lurked a noble fish which yet had not made his presence known to the angler. The dreadful malediction smote the sensitive scales of the fish like a waterfall. For half an hour the trout had watched from his safe retreat on the bottom the angler's lure, and was about to rush at it open-jawed when the angler's curse broke upon his ear and caused his auditory scales to tremble like the leaves of a tree shaken by the wind. But now the fish had heard and knew its danger. Turning deaf (scales to the repeated curses of the fisherman, the trout safely glided away into obscurity, and the angler went his way home with an empty basket. Moral—This story teaches the evil of swearing while fishing.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Fish Commissioners' report for California is on our table. It contains among other things a list of the food-fishes of California, some 90 in number. It was prepared by W. N. Lockington and is so minute that anyone catching a fish can find its name and species from the report. The annual appropriation is only $5,000 and it causes one to wonder to see the amount of good that has been done with it. There are hatched each year 2,500,000 salmon, and they are distributed about the State. About a million white-fish have been imported and distributed. Shad to the number of 115,000 have been planted and are now reaching market. Cat-fish, land-locked salmon and brook trout have also been planted in waters otherwise barren. The commission get no pay and have only the satisfaction of knowing that the State is better for their living in it and that the rich and poor alike are benefited by their labors.

J. Owen, of the San Jose Mercury lectured in Virginia last evening. If he were invited he would probably favor Reno. His subject is a useful one, i. e., "The Evils of Over-Production."

The Mountain Review is opposed to unlimited free coinage of silver. The Gazette has hitherto stood alone on this side of the mountains.

Our Lovelocks correspondent writes that Indian Agents Hawarth and Earle were there on Jan. 2, conferring with the Plutes.

Hugh McGinn kept a livery stable in San Francisco, did the hardest and most menial work himself, lived in a loft among the hay, and ate the coarsest food. He was so close at a bargain that, when lately brought to his deathbed, he refused to employ a physician, except on the condition of no cure no pay. He left $200,000 to his wife, whom he had many years ago turned away because she bought a silk dress, and who afterward earned a living as a domestic servant.
